AVALANCHE OF PANCAKES

Almar and Ethan stood on the rocky edge of the koi pond, watching the three-eyed fish swimming just under the calm sulphur surface. Almar coughed heavily, sucking in a deep breath of the smog-thick air, which burned his throat and caused tears to collect at the edges of his eyes. "This fairly sucks." "I concur," replied Ethan, while wiping the sweat from his forehead. It wasn't yet ten in the morning and the temperature had already risen above sixty degrees. The thick cover of aerosol gasses, carbon emissions and bacon grease that surrounded the planet had trapped the sun's heat, keeping everything at a slow simmer, even in December. "I can't believe that in nine short months, we went from a cold-weather city to a hell on earth." "If only we had done something when we had the chance, lamented Almar. "If only we had elected Bryant Lukes as VP(Academic)! With the position's limitless power, he would have been able to defeat global warming!" "I concur," Ethan replied. "Remember when Lukes promised to throw ice cubes at the sun?" "Yeah, he totally would have cooled that mother fucker dowwwwwn." "And then we wouldn't be living in this polluted, dead world." "And that climatechange induced volcano wouldn't have opened up under CAB." "Yeah, that was totally weird."
