AVALANCHE OF PANCAKES

Introducing the next evolution of newspaper distributions: The Gateway Dead-Hand Doomsday Device.

Designed and built by the finest of former Soviet Bloc nuclear scientists, the Gateway Dead-Hand Doomsday Device will activate in the event of a catastrophic printing disruption; be it a nuclear attack by a rogue nation, sudden drop in advertising revenue, or unexpected power outage.

The indestructible Gateway black box is guaranteed to survive a direct nuclear strike upon the Students' Union Building. In such an event, the Doomsday Device will automatically begin printing issues of the paper, beginning from the early 1910 issues, through the Depression-era soberness of the 1930s, the infamous 1952 "Year of Masturbation", up until the current hackery that we attempt to pass off as journalism. To keep things current, the Gateway Dead-Hand Doomsday Device is programmed to insert current dates, names and forced pop-culture references into the old articles, making them indistinguishable from the current, manpower-intensive issues of the Gateway.

As an added bonus, the GDHDD makes delicious frappaccios with the push of a button. It's advanced Mutually Assured Destruction software will also target the most populous cities on the planet for nuclear retaliation, guaranteeing punishment to those responsible for the unmotivated attack/minor clerical error that led to the Gateway's demise.

The Gateway: Learning to stop worrying and love the bomb since 1910.
