Isn't it funny when professors get hair cuts? It kind of makes them look like little kids. I just got a haircut the other week, and it didn't make me look like a little kid—it made me look like a button, apparently. And by button, I mean hot.

If any of you would like to see my hot new haircut—and the stars and planets, of course—you should come to the observatory this Thursday! It'll be your last chance before Easter break to come and see the stars. Also featured will be the moon: the rocky satellite that makes the tides.

Early Tuesday morning, NASA space shuttle Endeavor was launched for the longest shuttle mission in NASA's history, 16 days. One of the crew's first tasks will be to assemble Canada's robot Dextre, which is currently packed aboard Endeavor in nine pieces. Dextre was designed by MD Robotics, located in Brampton, Ontario and will help in maintaining and servicing the International Space Station. Go Canada!
